Chord tones are the tones within a chord. Altogether there are three chord tones in every chord. The first is the root. The second is the third. The last is the fifth. You may notice that the chord tones make up the triad of the chord. Chord tone soloing is the act of using a chord's tones to solo. While this may seem limiting (you only have three notes per chord) remember that you also have octaves which stretch your limits. The purpose of chord tone soloing is to make it easier to play ...

First, you will practice soloing over the chord progression using the correct scale which will be displayed in the “static” fretboard diagram on the screen.

Second, you will practice targeting the chord tones of the underlying chords as the chords change by following the “moving” fretboard diagrams in the video backing tracks.

CAGED and Chord Tone Targeting (Course Page)

Soloing with arpeggios, “chord tone targeting”, “soloing with triads”, etc. all mean the same thing. The idea is to focus on the underlying chords in the chord progression, rather than just paying attention to the overall key. For example, the chord progression that was used in the demo from the video above uses the chords:

When it comes to lead guitar playing, a common approach is to play the pentatonic scale or the blues scale over a chord progression. This is especially common in blues based music, and it works great. For example, if the song has the chords A7, D7, E7, you can sound great just using the A minor pentatonic scale.
