APB was indeed founded by the members of the Crest design group who developed the XR-20. They decided to split and continued developing their concept a APB, adding a variable HPF to what already was a good design. I spent only 150 euro for my XR20, but then I had to spend another 180 euro in capacitors, plus a LOT of work.

The XR20 has a sound very close to a big console. Punchy, great transient, good headroom, great highs, and quite transparent summing. It is a great submixer for drums. It takes saturation very well without losing low end, and produces clean punchy mixes. Plus it is great also to perform in the studio, layout is great.
