Desperate in Dubai isn't everyone's cup of tea, and I wouldn't have it any other way. However, I have to admit, it's difficult when people who don't like the book start slating it and sending me nasty messages, mainly Emiratis who feel that my portrayal of Lady Luxe was unjust and unfair towards their culture.

Dubai is full of acronyms – DLC, DFC, DMC, DIC, DIFC, JBR, JLT, MOE. The city that has grown so rapidly has an equally fast pace. No one even has the time to speak slowly and pronouncing a title fully is a gross waste of time. ... Part of Desperate in Dubai is, indeed, factual, and part of it is fiction. Some of the characters are inspired by ...

"She tried to make the pain go away by telling herself it was for the best, that it was all part of God's plan, that she would one day see the wisdom behind it. But despite the her efforts to appease her restless souls, she felt a cold chill take over her, inside and out." — Ameera Al Hakawati, Desperate in Dubai, #1

Ameera Al Hakawati (Author of Desperate in Dubai, #1)

The author's patriotism for Dubai is also offputting. Every single restaurant, hotel, nightclub, villa, etc does not need to be described as some beautiful palace in the sky. We get it, it is a cool and glamorous city. But that is because of the expat population and Dubai would suck without it.
