Eating in Georgia: the supra. The Georgians have a unique way of eating that's a direct reflection of their legendary – and seemingly boundless – sense of hospitality. The place to best experience this is at a supra, or Georgian feast, where food, wine and music come together as the quintessential expression of Georgian culture. At a supra, the table is laden with food before anyone sits down.

Bread fresh from the traditional toné clay oven. A lot of exciting things are happening in Georgia today as the country celebrates 26 years of independence. Many more foreign visitors are coming to Georgia in search of the best wines, restaurants and experiences. My book, TASTING GEORGIA, was written to help those travellers learn about Georgia's rich food and wine culture, and find the best places to go (and the most delicious dishes to cook at home).
